no matter what may or may ot have been Robin's state of mind month, I contend that he is not at this moment in condition to confer with coursel," said Mr. Jerome.

"Nevertheless, we will proceed," said the Justice coally.

Mr. Whitman merely bowed at this epening victory and without further delay the clerk began drawing the names of talesmen from the wheel and calling those drawn to the stand for

The first man up was Mark Isaac Lefcowitz. As soon as he came forward Mr. Jerome raised a unique point, He objected to Lefcowits taking the oath on the ground that Robin, being finance, the selection of a jury to try him, was an invasion of the rights of the defendant. He objected to each routine question put by Mr. Whitman, and each time he was overruled.

When Mr. Lefcowitz Mr. Jerome sprang a new surprise by declining to examine talesmen. He held that since his client could not aid him in choosing jurors his hands were tied.
